“ The day I learned how to spell Daddy

I was at home in Berkeley and I had just finished my afternoon round of cartoons. I knew what time it was, it was time for daddy to come home from work in one of the trucks he drove for the company. He always brought the Mack home to wash it after a long day of hauling. I was standing looking out the front door window waiting for dad to pull in. When he did a few minutes later I started jumping up and down screaming to my mom in the next room "d a d y's home d a d y's home. I was only 5 in kindergarten. I remember mom asking me to spell it again so i did. "You forgot a letter" she said and once she told me to add that extra D I ran out the door to my dad just hollering as loud as i could D A D D Y you're home. he scooped me up in one arm put me up in the truck and we drove down the rest of the driveway back to the garage to start washing the truck.

I will forever miss my father. The man who raised me when he didn't have to but loved me enough to do so. I love you D A D D Y
